Legislative Issues:

- Missouri: A Cole County judge ruled Tuesday that Missouri lawmakers can redraw congressional boundaries in the middle of the decade. Circuit Judge Christopher Limbaugh ruled that even though there's no explicit authorization for mid-decade redistricting, there's no explicit prohibition, either. The decision came the same day that redistricting opponents turned in more than 300,000 signatures to put the map up for a statewide vote. Chuck Hatfield, an attorney for the plaintiffs in the case, said he plans to appeal the ruling that approved redrawing the mid-cycle congressional map, to the Missouri Supreme Court. The Missouri petition drive to force a vote on the gerrymandered congressional map virtually eliminating Missouri's existing 5th Congressional District will only move forward with two-thirds of the collected petition signature pages. Under the new map, the district, traditionally represented by Congressman Emanuel Cleaver, is carved up with portions attached to the 4th and 6th Districts, making it heavily Republican.
- Kansas: At this point, it doesn't look like the Kansas Legislature will take up redistricting (redrawing congressional district maps). Reporting by the Kansas City Star revealed that there are still not enough votes in the KS House to approve a new map that would undoubtedly carve up Johnson County. Further, that there were not enough votes to override Gov. Kelly's veto.
- Voters will decide on a constitutional amendment in August that would dramatically change how justices are selected for the Kansas Supreme Court.
- Remember: No three-day grace period for mail-in ballots in 2026 in Kansas.
